OU Writing Center
The University of Oklahoma

Grammar Guides:
8 Comma Rules to Remember

This guide identifies some of the basic comma rules[1] people often forget or apply incorrectly. Keeping these in mind can help you write with greater clarity and accuracy.

Rule 1

Commas are needed when combining two independent[2] clauses (complete sentences) with a coordinating conjunction (for, and, nor, but, or, yet, so).

> Example: "I wanted to wear flip flops, but it was too cold today."

Rule 2

When you begin a sentence with a dependent clause, set it apart from the rest of the sentence with a comma.

> Example: "On Saturdays, we wear Crimson and Cream."

Rule 3

Use a comma after a conjunctive adverb that follows a semicolon and connects two independent clauses. (therefore, nonetheless, additionally, alternatively, consequently, henceforth. For more conjunctive adverbs, see our Parts of Speech handout.)

> Example: "I wanted to wear flip flips; however, it was too cold today."

Rule 4

Use commas to separate items in a list of three or more things. This is called a serial or Oxford Comma.

---

[1] You'll see the essential portion of each rule in blue text that is bolded.
The example that demonstrates that rule in action is red, bolded, and italicized.

[2] For more details on independent and dependent clauses, see our guide "Types of Clauses and How to Use Them."

Example: "Anything is possible with coffee, willpower, and wifi."

Rule 5

Use a comma to separate an adjective that describes a noun when "and" could take the place of the comma.

Example: "The Sooners' offense set an aggressive, fast tempo from tipoff."

Rule 6

Use commas to set off extra information in a sentence that isn't essential to the sentence's meaning.

Example: "My sister, Maria, loves parakeets."

Rule 7

Use commas when including direct quotations.

Example: "Tania said, 'I have too much to read and not enough caffeine.'"

Rule 8

Do NOT use a comma to separate the essential elements of a sentence.

Example:
Correct - "Whoever left their laundry in the washer needs to get it out now."
Incorrect – "Whoever left their laundry in the washer, needs to get it out now."